

Physician Assistant Student Poster Session

The Physician Assistant Studies' mission is to educate students to become socially conscious and be accountable physician assistants with a commitment to the underserved. In conjunction with their completion of their master's degree, physician assistant students, in the Department of Family and Preventive Medicine, will be completing a student-led community engaged research project.

Students will work in groups of four and partner with a faculty member and a community partner to address clinic-based and community-based issues. The project will include items such as community needs assessments, developing a research questions, and developing a research proposal, paper, and poster.

"This is the first year of this curriculum," said Virginia Valentin, DRPH, PA-C, an assistant professor in the Physician Assistant Studies program. "We are proud of our students who have begun what we hope will develop into long term community partnerships."

Class 48 of the Physician Assistant Studies program will present their posters and findings in the second floor atrium in HSEB on Jul 18 from 10 a.m. to 12 p.m.
