

On Friday, April 13, the University of Utah Physician Assistant Studies Program will be holding an open house at the Russell C. Taylor Health Science Center at Dixie State University in St. George, Utah. The open house will be to inform students, faculty, staff, and community members about the new Physician Assistant Studies Program collaboration between the University of Utah and Dixie State University.

This collaboration between Dixie State University and the University of Utah was created to expand medical education into Southern Utah, and it will be the first of its kind.

“The open house will be an opportunity to come and look at classroom technology and get a feel for the fact that the University of Utah has partnered with Dixie State,” said Melissa Husebye, the Academic Program Manager for the Division of Physician Assistant Studies in the Department of Family and Preventive Medicine.

Husebye, along with Dan Clawson, IT Project Manager for the Physician Assistant Studies Program, and the five new Physician Assistant Studies Program faculty and Staff members will be in attendance at the open house to answer any questions.

For more information regarding the Physician Assistant Studies Program St. George extension, visit: <http://medicine.utah.edu/dfpm/physician-assistant-studies/program/st-george-campus.php>

University of Utah
Physician Assistant Studies Program

OPEN HOUSE

FRIDAY, APRIL 13
5-7 PM

Russell C. Taylor Health Science Center
1526 Medical Center Drive
St. George, Utah

refreshments will be served

